

Supporting evidence for Local Delivery (P)

Nick Harrison and Brian Nute introduced to the delegates the work of SELD (supporting evidence for local delivery) a newly formed department of Creating Excellence.

Drawing on examples from a recent workshop on evidence issues in rural regeneration the workshop communicated various sources of available data for use in delegates own projects. They also cited projects where the sourced data has been used to good effect in planning and delivering policy and practice.

Presentation was shared between Nick and Brian. This proved to be a useful device for holding the audiences attention onto a difficult subject. Some unlikely sources of information where identified, including research from university departments, and good publicity was given to established sources such as South West Observatory.

David Lee 8th December 2005